If a client needs a little extra help during the night

If a client occasionally needs care during the night, then a 'waking fee' can be charged by the carer (£11 for a single call, rising to a maximum of £22 should several calls a night occur). We recommend that this should cover a period of 8 hours, such as 11pm–7am, depending on daily routine.

We are mindful of the impact that a waking service will have on our carers' daytime support. Therefore, should multiple waking episodes occur, we recommend additional time off during the day for the carer, or an additional night carer.

Bank holidays – During bank holidays, carer fees are charged at 2x the standard rate. Extra fees can also be charged over the Christmas and New Year period too.

Client meals – You are there to prepare meals for the Client(s) you are looking after; should additional family members, or guests, wish to have food prepared then this should be agreed in advance.

Carer invoicing – You should invoice your client(s) directly for their care fee, with the client responsible for paying you at the end of each week (unless agreed with otherwise).

Couples – Care for more than one client is charged at a premium rate to reflect the additional care provision required. Agency fees however remain at the standard rate. We reserve the right to review the care provision provided and insist on two carers should we deem the need to be beyond a single carer's capability.

Travel allowance – This should always be agreed in advance of an assignment commencing. If providing visiting care, charge a set fee of £4 per visit to cover your travel expenses, this should be added to the weekly invoice you send to your client(s). If providing live-in care, charge for travel on your arrival and departure, this will be a maximum equivalent of a second-class train ticket from London (or your starting location if closer).

Work and rest time – Though live-in care is unmeasured work, the daily average should be a maximum of 10 hours of care, plus a 2-hour break at a convenient time for the client(s). Should care be required during this period this will need to be discussed with the office and the representative.
